RE: Match Group's business operations in Russia

March 3, 2023

Dear Mr. Kim,

We write to you as B4Ukraine, a coalition of Ukrainian and international civil society organizations working to curtail the financial resources enabling the Russian invasion of Ukraine. We expect companies to demonstrate opposition to Russia's war of aggression, public support for the people, democracy, and territorial integrity of Ukraine, and alignment with the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (UNGPs). At stake is not only the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a democratic Ukraine, but also the continuity of the rules-based international order and the prosperity of the global economy.

We request an urgent dialogue regarding potential inconsistencies between Match Group's stated policies on human rights and the company's ongoing business operations and relationships in Russia that may contribute to, or be linked with, human rights harms.

We acknowledge that Match Group has policies in place to guide the company toward ethical behaviour. The company emphasises its devotion to human rights in its 2022 Impact Report,¹ and further notes that it "respects human rights and workplace rights and remains committed to conducting its business in a manner that protects these rights."² Match Group further declares its commitment to:

"conduct its business affairs in accordance with not only the requirements of applicable law, but also standards of ethical conduct that will maintain and foster the Company's reputation for honest and straightforward business dealings."³

As of June 1, 2022, Match Group is a signatory of the United Nations Global Compact, aligning with its Ten Principles across human rights, labour, environment, and anti-corruption.⁴

It has been over one year since Russia invaded Ukraine and the devastating impacts continue to shock the global conscience and shake the global economy. Russia is violating international humanitarian law (IHL), including war crimes and crimes against humanity, through attacks on civilians and civilian infrastructure (e.g., mass executions, sexual violence, torture, and forcible transfer of civilians). More than 21,580 Ukrainians have been killed and injured and millions more have been forced to flee their homes, creating one of the largest humanitarian and refugee crises of modern times.

On September 21, President Vladimir Putin escalated the war by announcing a “partial mobilisation” of the Russian population. The accompanying legislation (Article 9 of Federal Law No. 31-FZ) mandates all organisations, including the 1,500 international companies that are currently operating on a full or limited scale in Russia, to conduct military registration of the staff if at least one of the employees is eligible for military service.⁵ They must also assist with delivering the military summons to their employees, ensure the delivery of equipment to assembly points or military units, and provide information, buildings, communications, land plots, transport, and other material means of support to the war effort.

This legislation entails new and significant legal risks for companies remaining in Russia, including potential civil and criminal liability under comprehensive sanctions regimes and recent international jurisprudence holding corporations and their officers responsible for human rights abuses abroad.⁶ Companies may be exposed to financially material risks through operational restrictions, such as limitations of future government contracts.⁷

Additionally, the Ukrainian government’s National Agency on Corruption Prevention (NACP) is creating a list of “foreign companies that, despite the international recognition of Russia as the aggressor state and the introduced sanctions restrictions, continue to cooperate with it.”⁸ These

In response to this unprovoked and unjustified war¹⁰ many companies have left Russia. According to the Kyiv School of Economics Institute's (KSE) #LeaveRussia company tracker, Match Group has decided to stay and continue its operations in the country.¹¹

Since the start of the illegal invasion of Ukraine, Match Group has not released a statement condemning the war, and reporting indicates that the company continues to provide its online dating app, Tinder, to the Russian market.¹² While the specific information regarding its advertising practices, payments to the Russian government, employees, or offices in the country is limited, the claims regarding the continued operations in the country are further supported by Tinder’s own website, which advertises multiple cities in Russia where its app is available.¹³ According to an earnings call in May 2022, the chief operating and financial officer stated the company would lose $10 million in revenue every quarter and 200,000 users due to the invasion.¹⁴ However, in Match Group’s regulatory filings, disclosures, and shareholder letters, the company includes the Russian market in its “European” metrics, which saw an increase of over $27 million in direct revenue as compared to 2021.¹⁵

Prior to the war, in 2019, Tinder made international headlines for agreeing to allow the Russian government agency Roskomnadzor the ability to review its users’ data, which was alleged to include private and explicit content.¹⁶ It is unclear if Tinder is following through with its commitment to the Russian government. However, in July 2022, a Russian court fined Match Group¹⁷ $2 million for its failure to gather data from Russian users of Tinder and store it in Russian territory.¹⁸

Due to these apparent inconsistencies, we are requesting a clarification from Match Group on whether it intends to continue operating in the Russian market. These activities risk enabling and financing Russia's violations of IHL and human rights law during the ongoing invasion and occupation of Ukraine and violating Match Group's commitment to abiding by the UNGPs. It remains to be seen how directly Match Group will be impacted by the partial mobilisation and the heightened legal, regulatory, operational, and financial risks associated with companies being required to provide direct support to the internationally sanctioned Russian military.

We seek to understand how Match Group has conducted and continues to conduct heightened human rights due diligence and how the findings of such a process have resulted in these continued business activities and relationships. As noted by the UNGPs:

...the more severe the abuse, the more quickly the enterprise will need to see change before it takes a decision on whether it should end the relationship. In any case, for as long as the abuse continues and the enterprise remains in the relationship, it should be able to demonstrate its own ongoing efforts to mitigate the impact and be prepared to accept any consequences – reputational, financial or legal – of the continuing connection.

In consideration of the above points and B4Ukraine's Declaration,¹⁹ we request an urgent dialogue with Match Group's relevant senior management and staff to discuss the company's ongoing activities and relationships in Russia, associated risks to the people of Ukraine and the company, and potential steps to prevent/mitigate these risks. Please contact B4Ukraine at contact@b4ukraine.org to schedule a call. We kindly ask for your response by 5:00pm CET, March 17th, 2023.

Please do not hesitate to get in touch if you require any further information.

Sincerely,

The B4Ukraine Coalition
